HON. FULLER WARREN
Governor

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

Honorable Fuller Warren
Governor of Florida
State Capitol
Tallahassee, Florida

Dear Sir:

Herewith is the Fourteenth Annual Report covering operations of the State Welfare Board for the year ending June 30, 1951. This is submitted in accordance with Chapter 26937, Number 458, Laws of Florida, Acts of 1951.

As you know, under this Act, effective July 1, 1951, the State Department of Public Welfare administered by the State Welfare Board, is responsible for submitting this report to you.

The report tells of the services and assistance provided Florida's needy during the past year; and points, too, to programs and problems which can be anticipated during the year ahead.

The Governor's office, the State Administration, members of District Welfare Boards, Legislators, local officials, private citizens, and the staff of the Agency have all had a part in the program as reported here.

Respectfully submitted,

STATE WELFARE BOARD

Ernest Inge

Chairman

Sheldon Smith
Commissioner

FLORIDA STATE CONSTITUTION

*Article XIII
Section III
as Amended 1936*

THE respective counties of the State shall provide in the manner prescribed by law, for those of the inhabitants who, by reason of age, infirmity, or misfortune, may have claims upon the aid and sympathy of society; provided, however, the Legislature may by general law provide for a uniform State wide system for such benefits, and appropriate money therefor; but no such general law shall provide benefits to any person who shall not have been a resident of the State of Florida for a period of five years continuously next preceding his application therefor, nor shall such general law provide for benefits to any such person solely on account of age who has not attained the age of sixty-five years; provided, further that where by any law of the United States, a lesser or different period of residence, age or citizenship shall be fixed in order for the State of Florida to participate in any Federal grants that might be made for such purposes, the Legislature may prescribe such requirements as to citizenship, age, and residence as will be consistent with and not in conflict with such Federal law.

IN ALL THESE YEARS

THE first wail of a new-born baby was heard in a hospital.

An old man, almost alone, lay dying in his bed in a small room which he had been renting.

A teen-aged child awakened on a June morning, proud that she, above all others, was to be valedictorian of her class when Commencement Exercises were held that night.

A young widow, anxious about her four small children, returned home after work to find none of them there.

A comparatively young man, without sight but having learned the "feel" of a weed as against a vegetable, hesitatingly plucked weeds in his garden.

A youngster, gropingly and hesitantly, went to his school principal, asking if he could talk with "one of those welfare ladies."

A boy stood in line in the school cafeteria, assured that he would have a balanced lunch.

A tuberculosis patient lay relaxed in a Florida sanatorium bed, with second-hand, if not first-hand, knowledge that his family was all right.

And a district welfare director tore at her hair when the resignation of another worker was placed on her desk.

All this, and of course much more, occurred in the period from July 1, 1950, through June 30, 1951. It took place in Florida, among Florida residents.

People like these — hundreds of thousands of them — were affected during that year by Florida's Public Welfare Program. While this is not a Beveridge-like plan of security from cradle to grave, the State-approved program of services and assistance does extend to people of all ages; for the people of Florida have said at the polls and through their Legislature and their Congress that they will provide for some of their neighbors who are in need.

THE baby whose first cry was heard in the hospital may not become a responsibility of the State Welfare Board; but then, he may. Through adoption studies, through foster home care, through the Agency's work with unmarried mothers, he may become such a responsibility.

In Florida, the Courts direct the State Welfare Board to study and report on all adoption petitions. Someone has said that nothing so permanently affects a human being, save death itself, as his adoption.

Where the adoptions have been initiated through recognized, licensed placement agencies, the Welfare Board makes no further study, pointing out to the Court that the adoptions are being handled through accepted centers. However, when the adoptions are being negotiated independently, studies are made by the Welfare Board and the Courts receive its recommendations.

In the year just closing, 1,250 petitions for adoption were received by this Agency for study and recommendation.

MORE and more, foster home care is being accepted as a way of caring for children who cannot, or the few who should not, live with their own parents or relatives. Frequently, this is for a short period of time; often it is for an extended period.

This year, it was possible to use some State funds in the temporary emergency shelter care program. However, this kind of care was carried on in those few counties of Florida where child welfare units have been established and the local communities contribute funds to support this work.

But child welfare units have been established in only 12 counties; and 55 others are found wanting in this progressive development in child care. For various reasons — none of his own choosing — foster home care for this baby may be arranged by the State Welfare Board.

PERHAPS few people are more in need of personal warmth and understanding than the unmarried mother. This may be the child of such a mother.

The mother, or mother-to-be, may need help in planning for the delivery of her baby; may need help in deciding what to do with her baby; and how. There, again, the Welfare Board provides a service.

This year, 372 unmarried mothers requested this kind of social service from the Welfare Board.

THE youngster who went to his school principal seeking help, knew certainly but inarticulately that "things weren't going right at home." He just could not, in his adolescent mind, figure

THE elderly man who lay dying was not alone. In his closing breaths he had asked for his welfare worker, had asked of her a promise that he would not be alone at his funeral services; and had received that promise.

There are no instructions for welfare workers requiring them to arrange for attendance at funeral services of their aged clients, yet this was done. Unusual—yet symbolic of many unspecified services which welfare workers constantly perform; or do when they are not over-burdened with applications to study and “reviews” which must be made.

Serving the needy aged goes considerably beyond approving a grant for assistance — when there are enough workers to provide these other services. Primarily, however, the Old Age Assistance program is one through which the minimum living needs of the elderly — those over 65 years of age who meet legal and regulatory requirements — can be granted some help toward meeting their basic living costs.

The most any of them received this year was $50 a month. Many, with some income or other resources, received less.

In June, there were 69,323 needy aged persons receiving an average grant of $38.78. During the year, $31,654,963.58 was granted in Old Age Assistance. And while 9,466 needy aged persons were added to the rolls, 9,540 were dropped because of improved economic circumstances, death, and other causes.

HAD it not been for Aid to Dependent Children, it is doubtful if the teen-aged girl would have had the thrill, and the accomplishment, of heading her graduating class in June.

Abandoned years ago by her mother, the child was reared by a grandmother, a grandmother rich in love and understanding, but poor financially. When the economic burden to provide for herself and her granddaughter became too great, the grandmother had turned to the Welfare Board for assistance.

The grant, to be sure, was inadequate, but it helped — helped the girl remain in school, helped her to have a self-confidence out whether it was his own behaviour, his father's, his mother's, or some of the brothers and sisters. He did know in his way that his family needed some help.

With special skills, the child welfare worker learned from him of the difficulties he had in mind. She was able to "piece together" the family background and homelife. With the child's consent, she went to the home, talked with the parents, and began a long procedure of helping the family to understand each other, and correct the difficulties which were responsible for the child's concern about his home and family.

This is a "casework" service which takes much more time and detailed effort than can be outlined here.

Yet, during the year just ending, 1,998 requests for services to children were received. These do not include those covering adoption studies, and services to unmarried mothers.

that kept her scholastically at the head of her class. It made it possible for this young graduate to go out into the world equipped to take a productive place in society.

The most ever granted her grandmother last year toward the support of this child was $27 a month. This was used for food, clothing, personal needs; not very much for a high school senior with living costs as they have been. In her earlier school years, the maximum grant was even lower.

THE young widow knew her work was far from satisfactory. You can't wonder about four small children who are uncared for and at the same time perform work efficiently. That night when she returned from work she knew another decision had to be made: Whether she would continue to work and let her children

"run wild," or whether she would turn to the Welfare Board and see if there were some provision for caring for them.

That is when she learned in detail about Aid to Dependent Children. The grant she could receive for the four children would be less than her current income; but by being at home, more time and attention could be given to planning meals, using less costly and "last minute dishes."

H. Armstrong Roberts Photo

Alone in a home — hungry; adequate Aid to Dependent Children could change this picture.

Most important of all, she could be home, giving a mother's love to her children, and a mother's attention. With the Aid to Dependent Children grant, it was possible for her to make the adjustment, give her children a more nearly normal life.

Of course, it required careful planning for the most her grant ever was during the year was $81 a month, for herself and her four children. That was $27 for the first child, $18 for each additional child.

In June, there were 70,958 children in 28,876 family groups who received an average grant of $20.37 per child. For the year, grants totaled $16,626,666.74.

THE young man able to weed a garden was more fortunate than some of his fellow citizens without sight. He can, as others have done, develop a vocation which will make him self-supporting, no longer dependent on an Aid to the Blind grant.

However, here in Florida there are many sightless persons who are completely dependent on the grant they receive through the State Welfare Board for their minimum living. They have no vocation, are unequipped, for various reasons, to be trained for some productive activity.

They look to the Welfare Board for a monthly warrant which helps provide them with the bare necessities of life. The most any received this year was $50 a month. Some, with income or other resources such as relatives who could help care for them, received less. A few, happily, regained their sight through operations often arranged by the Welfare Board with the co-operation of others.

In June, 3,322 needy blind persons received an average of $42.63. During the year, a total of $1,658,628 was paid in grants for Aid to the Blind to these needy persons.

In the same year, 390 were dropped from the rolls to receive blind grants. Death accounted for 192 of these removals. Changes in economic circumstances, regaining of sight, and other factors accounted for the balance.

THE boy, with tray in hand standing in the school cafeteria line, was not alone in his assurance that over the steam tables a balanced meal was waiting for him. School children throughout the state have had better meals as a result of the food commodities which come from the Department of Agriculture without any direct cost to Florida.

Cheese, dried eggs, dried milk, fresh apples, canned citrus juices, potatoes, and other wholesome, nutritious foods were distributed by the State Welfare Board to schools. They helped make the school lunches richer in vitamin content, more palatable — and most important, helped children grow more healthfully.

There are the needy blind who, until they become self-supporting, need assistance.

This distribution of foods, however, was not confined to schools. State and charitable institutions likewise benefitted from the Federal Government's price support program.

In the past year, surplus commodities with a wholesale value of $1,382,231.87 were distributed by the Welfare Board to 1,288 schools with an enrollment of 427,215 students; to 10 State institutions with 10,038 residents; to 54 charitable institutions with 5,497 residents; and to four summer camps with 738 children.

PEACE of mind is one of the first requisites in recuperating from tuberculosis. A patient lying in bed hardly can have that peace unless he has assurance that his family is free from hardships and various difficulties. Reassuring letters from home frequently are not enough.

Very often the State Welfare Board is called upon to make home studies in instances like this, giving the patient an unbiased report on his family. He knows the reassuring information he receives in this way is not "colored" by the wishes of his family to make him content.

This home service is extended to other State institutions whenever it is requested. In addition, studies are made of home situations for the institutions prior to the release of a patient or resident of a correctional institution.

This is another service of the Welfare Board, over and beyond providing assistance to the needy aged, blind, and dependent children.

In the year just closed, 8,786 requests were received from other agencies or institutions for services of this kind.

MAINTEINING sufficient staff to carry out the program of the Welfare Board always has been a problem; and during the year just ending it has become more of one.

The standards for employment, approved by the State Merit System Council, are high. However, salaries are low as compared with other governmental agencies and with private employment scales. As a result, there has always been a relatively high rate of turnover within the Agency.

During the closing months of the year, resignations increased as employees sought, and found, more lucrative positions elsewhere; and as they realized that with maximum limits on salaries as they are fixed by law, there would be little hope for increases during the next two years.

Small wonder that the district welfare director showed signs of real concern when another resignation came to her desk.

At the end of the year, those responsible for administering the program were faced with another difficulty: State appropriations for salaries and other administrative expenses were held by the 1951 Legislature at virtually the same level as for the two years just ending. That was 25 percent below what the Welfare Board had estimated would be needed for the program during the next two years, considering the increasing number of recipients and the increasing requests for service.

Arrival of the postman with an assistance check is awaited each month by thousands in Florida.

Vacancies were going unfilled, and those resulting from expected resignations during the next several months will be unfilled, in order to stay within the available funds. That means in all likelihood a slowing-up in handling applications for assistance, a cutback in other services which should be provided.

At the end of the year, 92 positions allocated in the Agency were vacant. It was expected that by the end of September, there would be 160 vacancies.

IN JUST THE YEAR

WHILE there are hundreds of thousands of Florida residents receiving benefits from the State's Public Welfare Program — in all age levels — the Agency still is not equipped to meet the needs of many. They are the permanently and totally disabled who are not dependent children, who are not blind, and who are not 65 years of age or older. There are others who do not meet those requirements who may be just as much in need of assistance; but so far, the people of the State have made no provision for them on a statewide basis.

Then, too, there were the rejected. Not all of those who thought they could receive assistance were approved for grants. Being aged, being sightless, being a dependent child, is not enough.

These are factors, to be sure, when applications are received and considered; but there are others, first of which is the establishment of need. Residence within the state, the amount of income and resources the applicant may have, and other considerations also have to be made.

In the year just closed, 15,296 applications were withdrawn, rejected, or otherwise disposed of.

Many of these persons were in as much need of assistance as any now receiving it. The program must be administered fairly and uniformly throughout the state. As a result, hardships sometimes occur. A person who has lived in Florida less than five of the last nine years and less than the full year before making application can be just as hungry as any one else. Under present State law, however, there is no provision for him in the welfare program.

THIS Agency is responsible for the licensing of all child-caring and child-placing institutions in the State, and has a further responsibility for children in day care and commercial boarding homes in three counties where, by special Acts of the Legislature, it has been required to issue licenses. In all instances, homes and institutions must meet acceptable standards before licenses are issued. This, too, is a service of the Agency, requiring time and study, and something which cannot be measured in dollars and cents.

EFFECTS of the Federal Social Security Act, amended by Congress in August of 1950, began to be felt in the welfare program in October.

There were many amendments to the Act, but the one immediately affecting the assistance program had to do with the Old Age and Survivors Insurance Program (Social Security.) The rate of benefit was raised, and a "new start" provision, making many additional persons immediately eligible for OASI benefits, worked to the advantage of the public assistance programs.

Many persons formerly receiving both Old Age and Survivors Insurance and assistance from the Welfare Board saw their incomes increased sufficiently from insurance so they no longer needed or were eligible for public assistance. The income of others was increased, so the assistance grants could be reduced.

The Old Age and Survivors Insurance fund comes from equal contributions made by employers and employees. Within limitations, it can be considered as a "pension," to which a person is entitled if requirements are met. In that, it differs widely from the public assistance program whose fund is made up entirely of Federal and State tax contributions and which is administered solely on the basis of need of the individual.

In the period from October, 1950, through June, 1951, 1,631 cases were dropped from the public assistance rolls because of increased benefits from the insurance program. In the same time, reductions in 9,816 grants were made which could be attributed to increased insurance benefits.

There are other revisions in the Social Security Act which become effective later, and for which the Welfare Board will have to plan. These include elimination of the first $50 per month of earned income to a blind person when considering his resources. Changes in the future also will affect payments of public assistance to persons in private and public medical institutions.

The Welfare Board has put greater emphasis on the responsibility of parents for their children in the Aid to Dependent Children Program and stricter regulations regarding eligibility where incapacity of the parent is a factor have been put into effect.

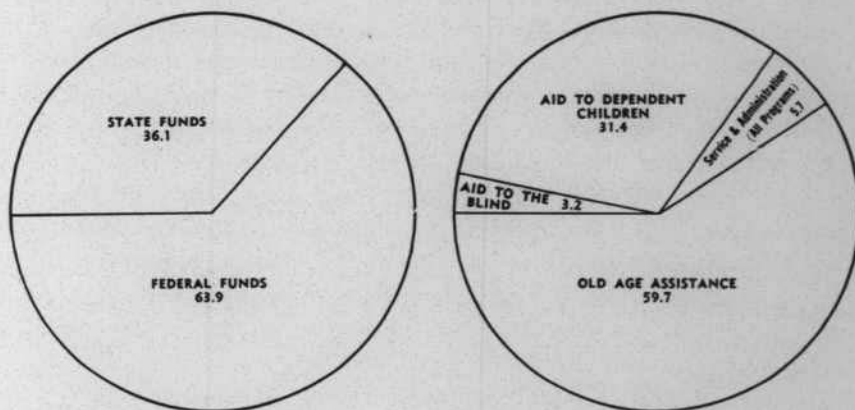

STUDIES have been made which will result in the general "tightening" of all considerations in determining need of the individual. These include efforts toward a greater degree of accuracy in developing facts about those in need; a reduction in the number of items to be included when making up the budgeted needs of an individual; consideration of cost of food, clothing, and shelter; and the real, or sale value of property as against county assessed valuations.

Florida ranked below the national average in monthly grants to the needy aged, blind, and dependent children, even though many of the states have in operation a general assistance program. Among Southeastern states, the grants for the most part were above the averages. Comparison of average grants among these states, with the national average, are shown below based on April figures, last available when this was printed:

	Old Age Assistance	Aid to the Blind	Aid to Depnt. Children (Family)
Nation	$43.07	$46.77	$74.72
FLORIDA	38.82	42.60	49.98
Alabama	20.65	22.11	34.07
Georgia	24.02	28.87	46.32
Louisiana	46.56	43.84	49.47
Mississippi	18.38	23.42	18.72
North Carolina	22.22	34.39	45.10
South Carolina	24.96	27.26	39.05

Since Florida meets requirements of the Federal Social Security Act and the regulations of the Federal Security Agency, in administering the public welfare program, a large proportion of funds expended through the State Welfare Board comes from Federal sources.

Net funds coming from the Federal Government amounted to $33,756,192.01, while $19,051,102.02 came from the State's General Revenue Fund. Since July of 1949, no funds are earmarked for welfare purposes. The charts below show state and federal funds, — how they were expended during the past year:

IN THE LEGISLATURE

IN 1940, (as of June) there were 35,222 Old Age recipients; 6,791 dependent children; and 2,346 Aid to the blind.

In 1950, there were 69,251 aged; 66,690 children; and 3,319 blind.

In 1951, there were 69,323 aged; 70,958 children; and 3,322 blind.

On the basis of this gradual, but continuous increase in "case-load," the State Welfare Board made up its budget for the biennium beginning July 1, 1951, based on the continuance of the present program, established by previous legislatures. The Board's estimates to carry on the program, the amount expended during the biennium just closing, and the Legislature's appropriation for the next biennium, follow:

	Requested	Expended	Appropriated
Old Age Assistance . . .	$27,408,450	$23,680,509.54	$24,500,000
Aid to Dependent
Children	13,788,940	9,770,124.04	7,000,000
Aid to the Blind	1,641,774	1,251,622.23	1,300,000
Services and
Administration	3,803,603	2,955,197.00	2,818,392

In the Aid to Dependent Children program, that means that grants must be reduced to a point where only fractional assistance will be provided, or where children now being helped through this program must be removed from the rolls. Children can be cared for better and more economically in their own homes. Foster homes and institutions meet the need where "own homes" are not available.

This appropriation also covers the State's participation in child welfare services. During the biennium just closing, $550,000 was available for these services. In the next two years, $150,000 will be available. Here, again, it will be necessary to curtail services.

In the Aid to the Blind program, there probably will have to be a slight reduction in grants.

In the Old Age Assistance program, grants can be continued at their present level—provided regulations on eligibility and personal budgets are restricted.

In services and administration, there will have to be a marked curtailment. As mentioned earlier, vacancies will go unfilled. That means applications cannot be processed as rapidly as now — even though the Agency is required, beginning July 1, 1951, to handle all applications within 60 days after they are received.

There will of necessity be less travel, essential in reaching many of those applying for and receiving assistance, and in administering the program. With a limited staff, those “extra services,” an integral part of any welfare program, will have to be curtailed.

The Legislature approved a new Welfare Act supplanting the one under which the Board has operated, with amendments, during the past 14 years. It changes the name of the Agency from “State Welfare Board” to “State Department of Public Welfare.” The new law gives to the State Welfare Board authority to name a director, whereas formerly the commissioner was named by the Governor. It provides for a minimum of two representatives from each county on the District Welfare Boards. A stronger fraud clause is embodied in the law. A “relative support” clause affecting the Aid to Dependent Children program is included, and examinations by physicians with yearly re-examinations in many cases, where mental or physical incapacity is involved, are required.

The new Act carries over many of the provisions of the old Welfare Act, and retains the district administrative organization.

Generally, it makes it possible for the new State Department of Public Welfare and the State and District Welfare Boards to carry on administratively the program of this statewide welfare agency in the years ahead, much as it has in this year as reported here, and as has been reported in previous years.
